Code of conduct

A regulatory code of conduct describes standards of behaviour and practice that the Board expects from all psychologists registered to practise in Australia. The standards reflect the core requirements of providing professional, safe, and effective psychological services to the public.

The Board has developed its first regulatory code of conduct, which came into effect on 1 December 2025.

Provisional registration

You'll need provisional registration to complete one of these supervised practice pathways to general registration as a psychologist:

- 5+1 internship program
- Higher degree

Provisional registration is also required for those completing a transitional program (for internationally qualified applicants seeking psychology registration in Australia) or a return-to-practice program (for those who have taken a long break from psychological practice).

Requirements for provisional registration

The requirements for provisional registration are set out in the Provisional registration standard.

Before applying for provisional registration, ensure you are familiar with the obligations and responsibilities of provisional psychologists.
